

BITUMINOUS COAL CONFERENCE NOW BEFORE HOOVER

Prospects of Assembling the

Two Questions in Invitations

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, July 23.—Prospects of assembling a bituminous coal conference in Washington, under Federal auspices, to relieve "the hunger, desperation, bankruptcies and startling un-American practices" alleged to be prevailing in that sorely stricken industry, hinged today upon the replies of some 125 representative operators sent them by the Hoover administration.

Turning aside from his efforts to relieve Germany's economic plight, President Hoover has directed Secretary of Commerce Lamont and Secretary of Labor Doak to ascertain whether the leading mine owners of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Kentucky and West Virginia are willing to meet here with their employees and discuss possible remedies for the industry's ills.

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, suggested such a conference to the President in a telegram dated June 11, which stated in part:

"Individual operators find themselves helpless to maintain a compensatory price for coal. The fare of the workers and their dependants is actually below animal standards. Calicoes, overalls and rags constitute the clothing of the mining families, while their food consists of mush, beans and molasses."

There was a somewhat pessimistic note in the invitations bearing the names of Lamont and Doak, for it was recalled therein that following the Lewis appeal an informal gathering of operators at the Commerce Department from the most part expressed the view that nothing could be gained by a joint conference.

A few days later, however, it was set forth, a similar meeting was held in the Labor Department with the executive committee of the United Mine Workers, at which the employees suggested the industry had not been effectively represented at the sessions with Lamont.

To this end, the enlarged list of invitations were enroute today asking telegraphic replies to the following two questions:

"At a convenient time in the near future will you be willing to attend a representative, joint conference of operators and miners for the purposes stated?"

"In your judgment would such a conference bring about the results outlined by Mr. Lewis?"

The miners' chief had based his appeal to Mr. Hoover on the following statement:

"Your knowledge and experience as a mining engineer especially equips you to recognize the necessity of the bituminous coal industry's adopting a program stabilizing labor costs as the first fundamental step to a correction of present day ills. . . . The very desperation of coal mining communities presents a grave problem to the American people."

REFINERY LOCATED IN HEART OF JUNGLE IS AN IMPRESSIVE SIGHT, STATES FRED KRING, JR., WHO FOR THREE MONTHS IS LOCATED IN INDIA

Topees Most Necessary During Daytime, As It Is Most Dangerous to Have Torrid Tropic Sun Strike Top of Head
— Never Any Overcast Days There

A second letter received recently by Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kring, Pond street, from their son, Fred, Jr., now located in Palembang, India, is here published:

Palembang, India.

Dear folks:
Again I left myself delay getting off word. Really have only one excuse to offer and that is the weather. After toiling ten or so hours out in this broiling sun, it's absolutely impossible to sit down at night and write a letter. I'm taking advantage now of a Sunday afternoon which is usually devoted to swimming or golf, but I know if I don't write now I'll be postponing it another week.

First I'll briefly retell events since Singapore. Left there April 1st in the afternoon on the K. P. P. boat S. S. "Myer." Late evening (the following day) we arrived at the mouth of the Moesi, the river on which Palembang is situated. Nothing visible but dense jungle and an occasional native hut.

Started up immediately, passing occasional native villages, and many native canoes, or sampans as they are termed. At 11 o'clock we arrived opposite the refinery. It certainly is an impressive sight to see a modern oil refinery out in the heart of a jungle.

We proceeded on to Palembang which is about five miles further up the river. Here we anchored and had to wait for morning, at which time the doctor and Dutch customs officials came aboard.

Two boys were there to meet me, and take care of my baggage. Since I was remaining for only three months I had little trouble with the customs.

Was assigned to a house with two of the chaps from the local engineering department. A very comfortable place. We have a Malay cook, a native house-boy, and two native girls to take care of laundry and making beds. Believe me there is plenty of laundry. All three of us change every day at least twice, and sometimes three times every bit of clothing, and it's all washed and ironed and ready the next day again.

The houses of the American colony are very comfortable. They consist of a large screened-in porch going the full length of the front of the house, a dining-room, and three bed-rooms. The bath is at the back of the house and immediately in back of it are the quarters of the help. Everything is very comfortably furnished, with the exception of perhaps the beds, which do not have springs, a custom here in the tropics.

Needless to say the days are extremely hot. Everyone has to wear a topee since it is very dangerous to have the sun strike one's head. Fortunately, however, the evenings are relatively bearable in view of a breeze which springs up after sundown. Just at present we're at the end of the rainy season. That means that every day we get a short shower, but usually the sun is out in full strength. No overcast days down here. I imagine after a month or so this sunshine everyday and all day wears on one.

For diversion there is golf, tennis and swimming. Needless to say I've allowed myself plenty of golf and swimming. Then too we have movies twice a week, and occasionally a dance. Neither of these I can fancy much in this heat.

With love,

FRED, JR.

Hammer First, Next Hermitage, Then Flushing

TERMS ARE TO BE CASH

At a public auction scheduled for Saturday afternoon, August 8th, Bensalem Township School District will sell three small school buildings, for which the district no longer has use.

One of the structures to go under the hammer is what is known as Hermitage School, situated on the Bristol Road, near the farm of David Reed. This is a one-story, stone and stucco building, with a shingle roof. It measures about 39 by 45 feet. Beneath is a complete cellar, and the building has a hot-water heating system. On the premises are a well and pump house. This plot, containing about one acre of ground, has 80 feet of frontage on Bristol Road.

Centre School is likewise to be sold. Located on Knights Road, near Bridgewater Road, it too is a one-story school house. The structure is of stone with a tin roof, and measures 40 by 39 feet. Heating is by hot-water system. The plot includes one-half acre of land.

The third building to be sold at this public auction is what is known as Flushing School, which is located near the Neshaminy Creek, on the road leading from Eddington to Newportville. This stone building is of one-story construction, having a shingle roof. It is equipped with hot-water. The school house measures 30 by 45 feet. The triangular tract on which it is built measures 175 feet in frontage.

The time of the sale is set at two p. m., daylight saving time. Parties interested will gather at Centre School. Immediately after this sale is completed the group will go to Hermitage School, and later to Flushing School.

The members of the board of directors believe the sale will attract many people as the buildings are said to be of such type that they can easily be converted into desirable dwellings.

Terms of the sales are to be cash. The board members have advised those interested to look over the properties before the auction date.

NAME COMMITTEE TO MEET BRISTOL TWP. SUPERVISORS

Some Bristol Township Taxpayers Claim the Roads Are Better in Some Sections

BUT MONEY IS EQUAL

Funds, It is Said, Are Spent to Better Advantage in Some Parts

CROYDON, July 23.—A most interesting meeting of the Taxpayers' Association of Bristol Township was held in the Croydon public school last evening, with a large number in attendance.

Robert Cameron, of Newportville, presided.

A committee was appointed to meet with the township supervisors on the evening of Friday, August 7th, to go over the books of the township. This committee is comprised of William St. Clair and William Moran, of Croydon.

The appointment of this committee was the result of a lengthy discussion last evening when the problem of roads in various sections of the township was discussed from every possible angle.

Charges were made by some attending the session that more time is given to roads in certain sections of the township than in others, with the result, they state, that roads are more improved in some sections than others. Croydon and Maple Shade vicinities were where the greater number of complaints originated.

It was brought out at the meeting that the sums for road work are equally divided among the supervisors of the township, but state the taxpayers, the money is apparently spent to a better advantage in certain localities.

The committee of two appointed to meet with the supervisors is to report at a meeting of the taxpayers during August.

A number of women attended last evening's meeting, the entire group present numbering about 65.

A special meeting of the association will take place on Wednesday evening, July 29th, at Croydon school house; and the regular meeting at Maple Shade school house, August 5th.

THE AMERICAN PRESS

Every once in a while somebody with an unoccupied mind rises up to complain about the "reckless sensationalism" of modern newspapers, which is described as one of the chief evils of the present day.

Of course, this is utterly false and mischievous talk. No flashy or dishonest newspaper has ever permanently succeeded as such in this country. It is true that newspapers are edited for the whole public. As they are made to be read from day to day, it follows that the better they are the more readers they will get and the more success they will achieve in the long run. Vicious journals may have an ephemeral success, but as soon as they are found out for what they are the people let them alone.

When the impartial student of American journalism considers that any man can start a newspaper if he has money enough to pay for its manufacture, or can get credit for printing paper, ink and type, and that there is no other code of newspaper ethics than that established by the consciences of the newspaper owners and editors themselves under the pressure of public opinion, he can only wonder at the exceptionally high standards maintained by the American press. As a body, there is no learned profession, however strict its code of ethics and however severe the accountability to which it is held by professional rule and etiquette, which is more faithful to its moral obligations than the newspaper profession. There is a reason, of course. The thousands of editors are scattered over the Union, in every community, both great and small, and more than any other men they are subject to the constant scrutiny and criticism of the community, so that their offenses and shortcomings cannot be concealed. This helps to explain why there has developed among them a professional honor as high as any formulated in the fixed rules and laws of any of the learned professions. They hold each other up to it, and public opinion judges them by it.

We are sure, therefore, that, as a whole, the people have no servants more faithful or more valuable than the thousands of newspapers that furnish them with the chief part of their reading.

THE WATER CUT

Humanity is roughly divided into two classes, people who like to go swimming and those who do not; or, to be more exact, people who say they like to go swimming and those who admit that they do not.

People who like to swim, or say they do, for some strange reason are invariably possessed of that missionary instinct to make converts. They are forever suggesting swims, reminding of private pools or informing others of nice swimming holes in the country where the bottom is either muddy or stony. They threaten, cajole, banter, sneer, beg, wheedle, command and exert all the other influences known to man to divert his fellow from a set purpose to stay out of the water.

Even the man who tells his wife she's the queen still wants to be the ace.

"MAKE-BELIEVE" by FAITH BALDWIN

Copyright, 1930, by Faith Baldwin

Travers Lorrimer, shell-shocked son of wealthy Margaret Lorrimer, mistakes Mary Lou Thurston, beautiful orphan, for Delight Hartford, whom he claims he married in England during the war. At Mrs. Lorrimer's request, Mary Lou assumes the role of Delight. Complications arise when, after months of happy companionship, Travers insists upon knowing if Mary Lou loves him. She realizes she cannot go on acting, for she has grown to care. At the crucial moment Larry Mitchell, Mary Lou's newspaper reporter friend, locates the real Delight acting in a revue. Mrs. Lorrimer, favoring Mary Lou, hopes that Delight is not Travers' wife and that she will return to England. After a sleepless night Mary Lou visits Delight. She finds her hardened by life and misfortune. Mary Lou broaches the subject of Delight's marriage. Delight no longer loves Travers, whom she thought dead. She surmises that Mary Lou loves Travers. Mary Lou asks Delight to give her a week in which to persuade Mrs. Lorrimer to see her.

CHAPTER XLVII.

IF, when the stipulated week was up, that strange, eager little person—what was her name? Thurston?—were to come to her and tell her that Mrs. Lorrimer was still determined to ignore her existence, what should she do?

The only sensible thing to do, thought Delight, was to confront Mrs. Lorrimer, manage to see her, carry the battle into the enemy camp and see what happened then. If, as far as character was concerned, Lorrimer had not changed, Delight thought she knew that he would feel under a sacred obligation. He had been a very chivalrous boy, generous and idealistic, under the hard-boiled veneer of war, the laughter, the almost hysterical gaiety of leave-taking. She had been dreadfully in love with him, had offered, because of her own surge of emotions, half adolescent, half forced into flower by the unnatural circumstances of war, to go away with him for part of his leave. He had refused. He had insisted that he didn't want her "that way." But wanted her as—his wife.

An Idealist

Was he still idealistic and, well, impractical, she wondered. She thought so, somehow, remembering Mary Lou's almost fantastic story of his fidelity to a memory, his frantic search, his unhappiness at a loss.

Yes, she would be all kinds of a fool not to take advantage of this amazing piece of luck which had come her way.

If Mrs. Lorrimer changed her mind and sent for her or came to her, they would have it out. If she didn't change her mind—well, Delight rather fancied she could change it for her. Meantime, perhaps it would do no harm to go out to Westmill, incognito, and see how the land there lay.

She might catch a glimpse of Lorrimer. She wouldn't make herself known to anyone, but she would rather like to confirm what Evanson had said with her own eyes.

Therefore, on the following morning, which was Sunday, Delight got up at, to her, an ungodly hour, and proceeded to Grand Central station, where she took a train for Connecticut.

At the Westmill station she asked how far the Lorrimer place was. On being told, she looked for a taxi, for she was not in form, and hadn't been for years, to walk several miles even under the ideal conditions formed by a sunny Spring day and a good road flanked with tall budding trees. She had the taxi set her down at some distance from the gates of Westwood house. She wanted, she said, to walk the rest of the way, the weather was so delightful.

The taxi driver meantime, grown loquacious after the manner of his kind, had regaled her with stories of the Lorrimer; of Lorrimer's long illness and his recent miraculous recovery; of his regained interest in life.

Castles in the Air

After having made careful inquiries as to the extent of the Lorrimer place, Delight got out of the cab, paid the talkative driver, and proceeded, avoiding the gates, to walk along the main highway which skirted one side of the estate. The sun was warm, her high-heeled shoes not the most practical things in the world to wear on a protracted wandering and she stumbled along, uncomfortably, a little wearily, warm in her winter coat, wishing strangely that she had been able to afford the smart spring suit she had seen in a Fifth Avenue window. Well, perhaps she could soon! But she had been afraid to spend what little was left over from her salary after the hotel bills and other necessities had been paid. She had to be careful unless, through this lucky chance, she found she no longer need be.

She began to think of little trottier lapin coats, of tweeds and silks, of evening gowns, of a sable scarf like Mary Lou's, of quantities of the very elaborate underwear and very heavy perfume which she found desirable.

A high fence, or wall, ran around the Lorrimer place. It seemed to Delight that she walked miles on the other side. She was, she reflected soberly, pretty nearly always on the other side. What was it that Harry had said to her once—"Always on the outside, looking in, isn't that so, old girl?" Mustn't think of Harry now. To think of Harry would complicate things dreadfully. Put Harry out of her mind. Forget that he had ever existed. What unlucky fate had caused him to exist, now that this unexpected alteration in fortunes might be in store for her? Play her cards carefully and relegate Harry to the limbo of forgotten madmen until the time came to dispose of him altogether.

Presently, very tired, she came to a low door in the wall. It had been left open. She peered through, stooping in order to do so. She saw trees and a path, and beyond that a perfect tangle of boxwood hedge which reminded her somehow of England, which she called and thought of as "home."

She went down the two shallow steps, under the little broken arch and through in the pretty path. That corner of the place had, with so many others, been left to grow wild at its own sweet will, with merely the path kept cleared and the underbrush checked. The path wound and twisted through the trees, and Delight followed it idly, something young and untarnished in her responding unconsciously to the frail green shadows of the new leaves, to the unstirred birds, to the dappled sunlight and the bright blue sky.

She forgot, for a moment, almost everything, and was a child again in England.

Before she knew it she had come close to the boxwood hedge and heard voices.

One voice was Mary Lou's. It was quite clear, and Delight stopped, her heart beating fast, and listened. She stepped back and leaned against a tree. Mary Lou was laughing.

"Lorry, you're so silly!" said Mary Lou.

The hedge grew very high and thick, and had been clipped into entertaining formal patterns. It had also been trained into a sort of maze, and was wide, forming a semicircle at the point at which Delight viewed it. Apparently Mary Lou and Lorrimer were sitting there, just beyond her view. "Well, it's a swell day to be silly," Lorrimer remarked, and Delight leaned forward, listening eagerly. The voice was strange to her and yet touched a chord in her memory. It was deeper than she recalled it but vibrant, as colored with overtones as the voice of the boy she had known, a voice which had stammered love to her, and protestation: "You're all my world, Delight. I'll love you always."

She smiled, a twisted little grimace, remembering.

"Suppose," said Lorrimer, "we ditch this family party and go out to the island this afternoon? I'll take you up for a hop—I want you to see the plane. We won't get ours for a matter of weeks, of course, but you'll get an idea. Perhaps you'd like to choose a color scheme," he inquired, seriously, "for the fittings and what not?"

"Oh, of course, lavender and green!" laughed Mary Lou. "Why not?"

"Sounds rather boudoir," he objected. "Come on, let's go this afternoon, Delight."

The Eavesdropper

The listener shrank back against the rough bark of the great tree, hearing her name spoken to someone else. She felt like a ghost. "And," continued Lorrimer, "let me take you up for a ride. You like flying. You'll trust yourself with me, won't you?" he asked.

"You know I would," said Mary Lou, simply.

"But not to me," Lorrimer told her. "Isn't that right?"

She was silent. Suddenly, as the woman who listened waited, her heart beating thickly, and as the sunlight fell in golden splashes on tree and hedge and path, Lorrimer spoke again. "I'm always breaking promises," he said, "and I know it. But I'm human after all. Seeing you day after day, being with you constantly has only served to convince me how right that boy's love was, long ago, that love which has not altered, save to strengthen and deepen. We knew each other briefly enough, Delight, I admit that. We have changed, both of us, you perhaps more than I, basically. But I must have known then the sort of girl you would become the sort of girl who would return to me, the only girl in the world!"

EMILIE WINS SIXTH CONSECUTIVE VICTORY

(By T. M. Juno)

EMILIE, July 23.—Emilie Y. M. A won its sixth consecutive victory of the second half of the Bristol Twilight League here last night when it defeated the St. Ann's nine to the tune of 5-1. It was the first defeat for the "Saints" in their last six starts.

"Ike" Watson toed the slab for the winners and allowed but four hits and did not issue a pass. He was aided by wonderful support by his mates and would have had a shutout but for two errors in the first frame.

The "Saints" played poor ball afield being charged with six errors and each coming at a time to prove disastrous. Leo Hibbs, of the Goosetowners, was the only hitter to get more than one hit, receiving two.

The St. Ann's boys scored in the first when Fields reached first on Hibbs' error; he advanced on Gilardi's sacrifice and scored when Cochrane dropped Brushia's high fly.

Emilie counted twice in the fourth. F. Hibbs hit left for a single, stole second and continued to third when Oriola threw wild; Brushia also made a wild relay and Hibbs counted. A base on balls to Bruce, his steal of second and Oriola's wild heave followed by Hibbs' single scored the second run.

Nicola's wild throw on Rockhill's roller, a steal and B. Praul's two-bagger to center scored an Emilie counter in the fifth frame.

Two more came over in the sixth. Bruce was safe when Parelle muffed Juno's throw. He stole second and came home on T. Praul's drive to centerfield. L. Hibbs forced Parelle, on a bouncer to Whyno and advanced when Juno threw wild to first in trying for a double-play. Ashby, batting for Cochrane, delivered a hit to left field, registering Hibbs.
